Concept Note

India has been one of the most well-known non-Arab states where Arabic language grew and developed through the different periods; despite the fact it had never been an official language. A thorough study of Indian history suggests that India’s first substantial contact with the Arabic language came when the Arab Muslims settled in the western Indian province of Sind. Subsequently, the Arabic language continued to flourish further under the patronage of the Mughal rulers in India. In the Islamic epochs, the usage of Arabic was liturgical. But after the independence of India, non-sacred Arabic gained momentum. Departments of Arabic have been established in many central and state universities considering the demand of the language in different government as well as private sectors in today’s globalized world. This paper has made an attempt to analyze the processes and extent of development of Arabic in India since its arrival, indicating career prospects in the days to come.

Arabic language had reached India in the seventh century as a sacred language of the religion of Islam which was mainly studied and used by Muslims only. It developed and flourished under the patronage of Muslim rulers during Mughal rule in India. Previously, the usage of Arabic was liturgical. But after the independence of India, more precisely, after liberalization of the Indian economy, non-sacred usage of Arabic gained momentum. So, the Indian Government paid considerable attention towards the study and research of Arabic language by including it in the universities as a foreign language. By the inception of 21st century, the demand of Arabic language has increased manifold augmenting career prospects in various fields in the days to come.

During these past fourteen centuries of the existence of Islam in India, Indians not only studied and memorized Arabic texts but also authored some of the most authentic and respected texts in Arabic and Islamic studies. Indian scholars took great care and pain during the last two centuries to serve Hadith, teaching, compiling, explaining and commenting on this vast treasure. Darul ‘Ulam Nadwatul Ulama at Lucknow (established 1894) emphasised on Arabic language and this remains its distinguishing point to this day. Most of the Arabic works authored in India are on religious themes but there are also works on philology, poetry, philosophy, history, travel, biography, belle-lettres, medicine and mathematics, etc.

After Independence in 1947, free India was quick to gauge the importance of Arabic language as a bridge to connect with the Arab world spanning from the Gulf to the Atlantic which had great geopolitical and commercial relevance for India. As a result, new Arabic departments were opened in dozens of universities and hundreds of colleges across India. Cultural exchange with the Arab countries has been encouraged, a cultural and literary Arabic journal, Thaqafat’ul-Hind is published since 1957 by the Indian Council of Cultural Relations in addition to a number of Arabic magazines and newsletters published by Indian missions in the Arab world. In addition to this, dozens of Arabic magazines are published by various Muslim organisations and madrasahs in India, some of which, like Al-Ba’th al-Islami, have a high reputation. Arabic books are also regularly published in India. These are mostly of religious texts, but also include works on poetry, literature and history etc.
